Ontario Health Regulators protect the public

There are more than 400,000 regulated health professionals in Ontario and 26 regulatory health colleges that oversee them.

We regulate health professionals so that you and your family can receive safe, ethical, and competent healthcare.

We are not schools or professional associations. Under the law, our duty is to protect the public.

Ontario Health Regulators protect the public by:

Setting the requirements to become a regulated health professional. Only qualified professionals are registered to practise.

Setting and enforcing practice standards so that you can receive safe and competent healthcare.

Having programs to help professionals keep their knowledge and skills up-to-date.

Providing public registers to verify that your health professional is qualified.

Helping if you have a concern and complaint about your health professional.

Looking for a health professional?

All Ontario health regulators have a list of the professionals they oversee. This list is called a public register. It is updated regularly with reliable information.

Find your health professional on the public register and make sure that they are allowed to practise.

On the registers, you will find information like:

- Where they work
- Their contact information
- The languages they speak
- Their professional credentials
- Any discipline history
